"There is no getting away from the fact that the cheap tyre has not been a success. It looks all right and feels all right, but it does not wear all right; and as, after all, the majority of us get tyres for the purpose of using them, then if they do not wear, they are hardly fulfilling their mission. If I were a cycle agent, I should make a point of impressing upon my customers the desirability of their spending a bit extra on having good class tyres, because I should reckon to have much less trouble in the future from those customers than if I let them have the cheap variety."

Cycle and Motor Trades' Review, August 16, 1906.
