SADDLES

Of no bicycle component can it be said with greater emphasis than of the saddle, that the best is cheapest. The saddle, due to its constitution and its usage, is the most vulnerable of a cycle's many components. For the rider who values health, ease awheel, and durability, only the best is good enough.

Since, however, buying must in some cases submit to price limitations, saddles of Brooks manufacture are to-day available at prices suited to all pockets.

With cycle saddles the price is chiefly controlled by the grade of leather used for the top. The butts used in the manufacture of Brooks saddles are of the finest quality only.

In the present catalogue all saddles of the same general type of frame are listed beneath one illustration, with any minor variations described in the text.

Heights given are from centre of clip to under surface of seat immediately above.
